02-11-2022, 8½" x 11".
 Bristlecone pine observed at 14,200' Mt. Princeton, CO, 1971, used as illustration of poem written in 1965.

You are my life-center, my heartbeat.
 I pulse to your footfalls
 You scribe my days from a pin-point:
 And the scattered metal ashes
 Comb to a pattern,
 Comb to a pattern beneath your compass.
 From the slopes my waters gush,
 Gush and hobble to the sea:
 Sprayed gurgle in an un-severed vein.
 Like the branch that stretches into the dusk,
 Like the root that grapples about the rocks:
 So am I stranded, sucking at both ends,

And throwing myself out,
 Out, into the earth and you.
 Draw a breath, a kiss. Dare you?
 A kiss, not a swallow!
 Oh but you're young, my heart!
 Learn that to part lips is to Cleave the vein, snap the root,
 Flay the metal and blow the column.
 Will you lock your freedom in a flutter?
 In a flutter?
 No. To be free is to be flung.
 To be one is to be flung at another:
 You.

15½" X 11¼" . From a photo by Julien Olivier. "I've run, and we have walked and skied this trail for nearly 50 years and never cease to be enthralled by its beauty. It's like a movie, changing with the seasons.
On that particular afternoon, we did something new by going off-trail and bushwhacking beyond the stone wall to the top of the hill overlooking the pond/swamp. There we sat on a stump for meditation. Yesterday, we took the same walk; but this time, still making our way through the brush, we climbed the next hill and sat some 5 feet up on a large rock (probably dropped there by the glacier some 15,000 years ago. The moss made for nice padding (albeit a bit wet) as we again sat in silent contemplation." Given to Julien

06-06-2026. 11" x 16¼". You sit like a silent sermon on gratitude." She said, "Yes, you can. I actually like welcoming people." "What's your name?" "Donna." Given to Donna.
